A gentleman in town has a communication from a railway passenger agent in Canada, announcing that in all likelihood a large party of Canadians will visit these islands in March next. They may confidently be assured a warm welcome, not only from their countrymen here in numbers, but by the whole community.

Mrs. Geo. W. Nawaakoa died Tues day at 2 o'clock, at Peleula, of consumption, from which she has been suffering for several years past. Mrs. Nawaakoa was a half-caste about 34 years of age and was formerly a Mrs. Newton, She had five children with her former husband, three of whom are living.

At about 6:25 Wednesday evening the electric street lights sprang into their wonted effulgence after an absence of three nights on account of the broken water wheel shaft. An attempt had indeed been made on Tuesday evening to light up, but it was unsuccessful probably owing to the demoralization of the conductors by the storm.

New Year's Day was quietly observed in and about the city. There was a good deal of driving round indulged in. The principal outdoor sports are elsewhere reported. Natives as usual made it their great holiday with luaus, etc., but there was not an inordinate amount of drunkenness, among either foreigners or natives, considering all things.

About 8 o'clock Tuesday night the front and back door of Hon. J. I. Dowsett's office, Queen street, were discovered by the police to be unfustened. Inside papers and other articles were strewn about in confusion. Communication by telephone with the proprietor could not be got, probably owing to wires down, and a police watch was set on the place for the night.

The funeral of the late J. K. Spalding took place on Thursday and was largely attended by Hawaiians and foreigners. The interment was in Kawalahao Cemetery, the Revs. H. H. Parker and A. Mackintosh officiating in the burial services. The late Mr. Spalding was a devoted worker in the Hawaiian Blue Ribbon League, and was instrumental in lessening drinking habits among men in the employ of the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company.

St. Andrew's Priory Thursday evening, which was very largely attended. The programme opened with a recitation by the Rev. H. H. Gowen, which was given with good elecutionary power. Then followed songs by Messis. T. R. Walker and T. May, with Mr. Wray Taylor as accompanist. These were followed by a tableau representing the leading Christian nations, in which several ladies and the latter could only say for himself that naval officers took part. The Tramway Opening.

The tram cars did a heavy traffic the opening day, New Year's, on King street where they ran. It was a very unsatisfactory service for the public, however, as hundreds waited at the corners for belated cars only to be disappointed, the fullest complement allowed being already on board. The company should have had double the cars on the line that it had. Otherwise, the traffic seemed to be conducted without much friction. It will be well if permanent effect be given the prevention of over-crowdgn-a grievous nuisance elsewhere-although the virtue in this case is owing partly to the interference of the police. The remedy, however, must not be effected at the sacrifice of public accommodation, but by the company being obliged to supply a sufficiency of cars for every emergency.

Obituary.

Mr. J. Kapolena Spalding, shipping master for the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Company, died Wednesday a. m. after a brief illness. He had been employed by that company over fifteen years, and held its respect and that of the public. Mr. Spalding identified himself from the outset with the Reform party, being one of the esteemed native Hawaiians in its counsels. He leaves a widow to mourn his loss. SERIOUS ASSAULT.

A Custom House Watchman Attacked at His Home.

Hakuelo, a native watchman for the Customs on the bark Forest Queen, was assailed at his house near Smith's bridge, Beretania street, after midnight of Saturday by a gang of ruffians. They pulled him out of his bed and proceeded to beat him unmercifully. One of his eyebrows was laid open, it is believed with steel knuckles. Hakuelo noticed a flash of shining metal as the blow was falling, which he at first thought was from a knife. He raised an outcry and the police responding arrested one of his assailants, who proved to be one of the Forest Queen's crew. The motive for the outrage is naturally suspected to be resentment at the watchman's faithful prevention of opium smuggling.
